Presidents Waffle

Happy New Year to you all, I hope you had a safe and happy Christmas, and are returning to club and training activities with gusto!

During our club break, there have been many of us planning and organising the year a head's classes, activities, trials, workshops and more improvements and upgrades to our equipment and clubhouse.

Even though we are all volunteers, the work that everyone puts in on our Sundays and all throughout the year is just phenomenal.

As always, we are looking for passionate, dedicated people that feel they would like to join our team as an instructor! If you are one of those people, come and see us in clubhouse.

Stay safe everyone, I look forward to catching up with everyone.

Lyn

Snake Alert - It's that time of year again

If you need help relocating or capturing a snake please contact Reptile Rescue on 0499 116 690

In Tasmania there are three species of venomous snakes; the Tiger snake, Lowland Copperhead snake and the White-lipped snake.

The Tiger snake usually has banding resembling a Tigers stripe and live in coastal environments, wetlands and creeks. Tiger snakes may grow up to 2.1m long and are one of the deadliest snakes in the world despite being generally non-aggressive.

The Lowland Copperhead prefers areas of low vegetation near water bodies and can grow up to 1.8m long. The White-lipped snake grows to only 40cm long and are identified by a white line on their upper lip. They live in heaths, grasslands and open woodlands. Due to their small fangs and venom glands they pose a far smaller threat. All three of these species are from the same family, which means that the treatment for snake bites is the same irrespective of which species bit an animal.

Snake bites occur most frequently in warmer months with long hot days and warm nights. Tiger and Copperhead snakes possess a potent neurotoxin - the primary cause of death is respiratory collapse due to paralysis. A snake bite is therefore a medical emergency requiring immediate treatment.

Symptoms of a snake bite include: Localised pain, numbness, ataxia (wobbliness), vomiting, salivation, inability to swallow, inability to vocalise and rapid onset of breathing difficulties and paralysis which is fatal if treatment is not prompt.

What to do if you suspect your pet has been bitten:

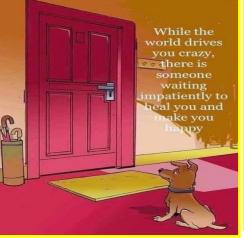

- Take your animal immediately to a veterinarian. Untreated snakebites are invariably terminal.
- Treatment for snake bike includes an intravenous drip (to help minimize shock and to maintain hydration throughout paralysis), administering antivenom and ventilatory support (life support machine) if the animal is unable to breathe adequately for themselves.
- Wrap a bandage around the affected area, limb, if possible, and try to carry dog as walking will cause the venom to spread via the dog's lymph system.
- Clinical signs may last up to 1.5 weeks and so an extended hospital stay of at least two days is required. In fact, it may take months for an animal to make a full recovery from a snake bite as their nerve receptors take time to regenerate.

What not to do:

- Do not attempt first aid.
- Do not wait for clinical signs to develop.
- Do not attempt to identify the snake, it is not required and you are only endangering yourself.
- Do not attempt to handle, move or kill the snake.
- All snakes in Tasmania are protected by law, fines of up to $1000 exist for harming or killing a snake.

Grass Seeds, a Problem for Dogs

Summer is the time to be keeping an eye out for grass seeds. They can cause problems for dogs, most commonly longer haired active dogs that are exercised in reserves or long grassed areas.

A grass seed can get caught in the coat and work its way down though the skin. Once it is under the skin the body tries to eliminate it and pus is formed that can swell into an abscess. These infections are commonly life-threatening if not treated.

Sometimes the entry hole can heal over leaving no clue to the source of the problem. Areas to particularly check for seeds are ears, between toes, armpits and eyes. It is best to have long coated dogs trimmed, at least the feet and belly, to reduce the chance of grass seed penetration of skin.

Check your dogs thoroughly for seeds after each walk. A good rule of thumb is, if you have grass seeds in your socks after a walk your dog is likely to have seeds in his/her coat. Also if sudden sneezing or shaking of the head occur or the eyes

Check your dog's paws regularly for signs of lesions or infection and if you do notice a swelling or lump on the paws or body, seek veterinary advice.

suddenly appear red after a walk, this could indicate a grass seed problem.

Bushfire Evacuation Plan

Now that we are well into the bushfire season, it is worth considering what we might need for our dogs if we suddenly had to leave our properties. They could be stored in the car if there's room or all together in a place where we could quickly load them into the car. Things that I thought of were crates, bedding, crate covers, cool coats, at least 2 litres of water, bowls, food that doesn't need refrigeration, a few toys. Thanks to the people who also suggested medications, vaccination certificates and a first aid kit. A gazebo for shade would also be useful if you have room. The photo is of my car with most of these things stacked in ready to go.
